The Daily Press.

HONGKONG, SEPTEMBER 29, 1866.

THE Amoy residents who sent down a memorial against the Stamp Act a short time since, are anything but satisfied with the reply they received from the GOVERNOR. There are two points in it which they consider especially unfair. One is that the GOVERNOR assumes they were in ignorance of the modified scale of duties subsequently arranged, and answers the memorial by had been complaining only of them as if they had been complaining only of the schedule to the Singapore Stamp Act published with the first draft of the bill but afterwards abandoned. Of course if they had been doing this they would have been as a very ridiculous position when it was shown them that they were memorialising against a law which it was never proposed to pass. This was the result which the GOVERNOR in his reply sought to bring about, but from the first, the Amoy memorialists knew quite well that the scale of duties was to be modified. They unmemorialised against the principle of the measure of which they, in common with all the other China merchants, saw the evil. Then again they object to the GOVERNOR implying that they derive any sort of benefit from the military forces stationed at Hongkong, but in this objection we scarcely quite go with them. That matter is indeed but indirectly connected with the subject of the Stamp Act, and even if the put of Amoy profited to an extraordinary extent by the presence of troops in this colony, it would not in the least degree lessen the weight of what its residents might say against a measure of taxation calculated so vindictive as for as it goes, the "equalities" of which the commercial prosperity of this colony rests. As a matter of fact, however, it seems to us that the presence of European troops at Hongkong is beneficial to all the English residents in China whether they reside in the colony itself, or at any of the open ports. The troops are sent here as much to be in readiness to defend our treaty rights generally all over China, to protect commerce and to watch over those imperial interests wrapped up in the prosperity of trade in the East, as to guard the citizens of this town and colony. Considering indeed that the citizens of this town are not as a rule very tenderly cared for by the British Government, their views much considered, or their constitutional rights very carefully respected, it would hardly be going too far to say that the English garrison of this place is sent here for Imperial purposes in the first instance, and only by accident as it were, affords protection to the colony of Hongkong.

This is the great argument against the military contribution about which the Governor's minute will not apparently take the same view as the other residents, but about which Hongkong has a very strong opinion indeed. It is an illustration of the extremely easy-going nature of this community, that the opposition to the Military Contribution has slumbered of late as it has done. Such slumbering is not very indicative of a changed opinion on the subject on the part of the community. The opinion that has always been maintained is based upon a clear perception of the principles on which the English Government manages its relations with this part of the world, and cannot be altered, though it may be suffered to pass out of notice for a time. This peculiarity of the British Empire, besides the maintenance of eastern commerce. Possibly the Providential work which Hongkong has to perform in the economy of the world demands this also, but in the considerable, may be left out of sight and the eyes alone may be left out of sight and the eyes to see, may be left out of sight and the eyes alone, may be left out of sight and the eyes alone, may be left out of sight and the eyes alone
